About this Event

What's it all about?

The newly published DfE EdTech strategy calls on industry to support schools in overcoming challenges associated with implementing edtech. However, like any school implementation, a digital strategy consists of a well planned framework to accommodate change and shift in culture. Much too often, schools arm themselves with top of the range technologies only to find that through poor design, analysis and implementation, they are not able to transform the mindsets of their teaching staff. These are expensive mistakes to make and can be avoided.

This workshop, created and delivered by Dr Neelam Parmar is aimed at supporting senior leaders to increasing a more successful design, implementation and sustainable digital strategy within their school. Delegates will leave with a mini implementation plan to commence their own brave and bold edtech journey.

Who is Dr Neelam Parmar?

Dr Neelam Parmar is Director of E-Learning at Ashford School, part of the United Learning Trust. She is instrumental in leading the transformational change of embedding technology within teaching, learning and development. Neelam completed her PhD in Developing a Pedagogy while using New Technology.

What are EdTech Evidence Micro-Meetings?

Industry has responded to the DfE's rallying cry to support schools in making evidence informed decisions about their EdTech. 7 minute micro-meetings give school leaders the opportunity to listen to the impact evidence from 6 EdTech companies in a non-sales environment.
